

NUMBER 11 – PARSHAS SHMOT
28/29 DECEMBER 2007 – 19/20 TEVET 5768

Saving the Jewish People

Someone once asked a rabbi, “how many children do you have?”. The Rabbi answered “seventeen kein ein hara”. The man looked and said “you don’t think that’s a bit too much, when are you planning on stopping?”. The rabbi looked at him with a stern face and said, “when we reach six million”.

This message is very strong. Throughout all generations and eras since the exile in Egypt until the Holocaust, our ancestors would sacrifice all to have children. Jews have had large families, and all of this during more difficult times than our own. The elder people of this generation are begging their kids to get married and have kids. We want grandkids, nu...

What has happened? Has the current generation got less money or experiencing financial hardship? The youth have access to information about parenting, nutrition, safety, health and budgeting that I am sure the older generation never dreamed of having.

The explanation is not important. The solution is be fruitful and multiply. In Israel there is a demographic problem that in a few years Israel won’t be much of a Jewish state. In polls around the world the Jews are getting smaller. If we all do our part we are assured a Jewish future.

Shabbat Shalom!
