Breaking the Matzah

The Seder night has many interesting customs. Each act with meaning and accurateness. At the beginning we take the middle of the three matzahs on the seder plate and break it in half. One gets put on the side for the afikoman and the other to be used during the telling of the story.

The Rebbe points out a very profound idea. The afikoman is the last we eat on the seder night, it represents freedom, liberty and success. Yet the other piece of matzah is called the bread of affliction. We use it as a broken piece to show hardship. We talk about our failures and mishaps.

The Rebbe learns from this, the piece of matzah for afikoman is as broken as the other yet it still resembles greatness. Secondly, they are from the same piece of matzah. The only difference is one is at the beginning of the story and the other is at the end. Success and freedom is not perfection rather achievement and toil. It is the ability to go from A to B. We are all broken, we have all suffered affliction, and we all have moved forward. By leaving Egypt, escaping our limits, we excel.

Warm regards,

Rabbi Shalom White
